(Due to the nature how arguments start here because people jump to conclusions, I will state here I am not trying to invalidate what you say.. I just want to see your comments on my comments-)

This link looks moderately plausible, but fails to explain why in such large numbers, with such repetition, people describe the aliens as the greys or the blues.. If this link was true, wouldn't such "shadows" be of different forms, and not being the exact same description of what the greys and the blues look like? How does this link explain the missing time, the markings on some people, the appearance of surgery in the brain area (when the person has never been recorded having such surgery before), and lastly, but not least, the other family members who were not abused before but are affected by the visitations, also?

I do not claim that alien abduction does indeed exist, (it would be illogical, since I do not have concrete proof of this) but I am very concerned at the large numbers (not just 50.. but in the thousands) of people coming out reporting abduction, describing the same beings, under hypnosis? Hypnosis can yield false results.. but in such a large numbers? Wouldn't there be many inconsistencies?
I'm open to listen to any information on this subject, though.. I am curious about this, and want to know the cause, be it aliens, hallucinations, etc.

While this all sounds good, the data has been sufficiently withheld as to not permit other qualified persons to examine the data relating to the claims that you have referenced above. I do not believe that there are really medical records to back up some of these rumors, therefore we have a lot of claims without representation. Unfortunately, we must take the word of the so-called experts to provide us with accurate data. The second part of the problem is that it has been found that the field of abduction research has been totally polluted by the mass amount of publicity which it has received together with complete descriptions of what the "critters" look like. Take for an example, an issue of Omni magazine some years back featured an article and questionnaire by Dr. Bruce Maccabee and Budd Hopkins soliciting possible abductees. I found this article to be highly suggestive and would corrupt those answering the questionnaire, thereby seriously compromising the data. Let us not forget the wide distribution that Omni enjoys. Secondly, the nationally televised program, "UFO Cover-UP? Live!" aired October, 1988 also highly publicized the portrait of what these critters might look like. The problem thusly lies with how much of the data is good and how much is totally corrupt?

This is a very good point, however we do not have sufficient data to determine what the norm is for people who might fall under the Fantasy Prone. In a studies done with abduction research, it was found that there were striking consistencies between non-abductees and abductees in their descriptions of what takes place during an abduction experience. There is not enough data to answer the why of this yet, but it is being studied.
